Autism inspires winning game

MANSFIELD State High School's Bradley Hennessey won two awards at the Australian Information Industry Association awards.

The student, who has autism, won the Senior Students category after developing a game called An Aspie Life. He had been making games for four years.

"The inspiration for An Aspie Life was from the huge and rising number of people not getting vaccinated because they believe it causes autism," he said.

"I have developed all assets in the game, apart from music."
